Sachse, of Philadelphia.

For reference of the "Phifer" family of North Carolina, which claims descent from the "Pfeiffers of Peiffersburg," see "Reminiscences and Memoirs of North Carolina and Eminent North Carolinians," by John H. Doctor Francis Joseph Pfeiffer and his Descendants

I. 1. DOCTOR FRANCIS JOSEPH PFEIFFER, a native of Germany, was born May, 1734.* Volume XVII of the "Pennsylvania Archives," Second Series, page 375, contains the following reference to his arrival in America :

"List of foreigners imported in the Ship Phœnix, Capt. Reuben Honer, from Rotterdam, last from Cowes, England. Qualified Nov. 22, 1752."

The name of "Frantz Joseph Pfeiffer" appears in the list of passengers.

Concerning Dr. Pfeiffer's marriage there are contradictory statements. His Bible, in possession of Miss Mary Matilda Bryant, of Philadelphia, a great-granddaughter, contains a record written in German, and which, translated, is as follows :

"The 25th March, 1756, Anna Margaretha Beckerin was given to me in marriage."

According to this, which seems conclusive, the name of his wife was Ann or Anna Margaret Becker. We find, however, in the list of marriages published in the "Pennsylvania Archives," Second Series, Volume VIII, page 483, among those celebrated at the Old Swedes' Church, Philadelphia, the following :

* Epitaph.

“1756, March 25, Pfeiffer, Francis Joseph, and Margarete Wallter.”

An examination of the original records of the church produced the following :

“Mar. 25, 1756, marriage of Francis Joseph Pfeiffer and Margarete Wallter, by publishing ye 25th of March, 1756.”

The ceremony was performed by the rector, the Rev. Olof Parlin.

The name given in his Bible has been adopted.

The first reference found, styling him a physician, is in the Recorder of Deeds' office, Philadelphia, Book I, No. 16, page 242. Conveyance by Charles West, of Philadelphia, Cooper, and Hannah his wife, to Joseph Pfeiffer, of Flour Town, in the County of Philadelphia, “Practitioner in Physick,” Nov. 28, 1763.

Volume II of the “Pennsylvania Archives,” Second Series, page 447, contains the following reference to his naturalization :

“At a Supreme Court held at Philadelphia, before Lawrence Growdon and William Coleman, Esquires, Judges of the said Court, the twenty fourth day of September in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three, between the Hours of nine and twelve of the clock in the forenoon of the same day, the following subscribing persons being foreigners :” continuing on page 450,

“The persons hereafter named, being Foreigners, and of the People called Quakers, and other Protestants, who conscientiously scruple to take an Oath, Severally took the Affirmations & made the Declaration according to the Directions of an Act of the thirteenth Year of King George the Second, entitled ‘an Act for naturalizing such foreign Protestants and others therein mentioned as are settled or shall settle in any of his majesty’s Colonies in America,’ and of an Act of General Assembly of the Province of Pennsylvania, made in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and forty-two :”

In the list of names appears "Joseph Pfeiffer, of Springfield, Philadelphia County."

He was a member of the German Society, as appears by its rolls.

He died April 16, 1804, his death being referred to in Poulson's American Daily Advertiser of April 19, 1804, as follows :

“Departed this life on Monday the 16th instant, Dr. Joseph Pfeiffer, in the seventieth year of his age. His remains were interred yesterday afternoon, attended by a considerable number of mourning relatives and friends.”

He was buried in his private burial-ground, the following being a copy of his epitaph :

Died April, 1804.

“ I know that my Redeemer liveth, funeral from his late residence, N^o. 511 North Second Street, this afternoon at 3 o'clock."

The same paper of Sep. 17, 1822, contained the following obituary :

"Died, on Saturday, the 14th inst., JACOB FITLER, Esq., in the 70th year of his age, after a long and severe illness.

The deceased was much respected and esteemed by his acquaintances, and much beloved by his family. The general opinion entertained of his integrity secured his election to the office of Sheriff of the City and County of Philadelphia; in the discharge of the duties of that office, it is believed, he caught the disease which carried him to his grave."

V. 30. ANNE ELIZABETH STRETCHER, dau. of Joseph Innes Stretcher and Elmira Fidler (16), b. June 26, 1836; m. first, Gen. Charles S. Russell, Feb. 13, 1855; he was b. at Boston, Mass., Mar. 31, 1831; d. Nov. 2, 1866. She m. second, George W. Joseph, June 8, 1867; he was b. Mar. 6, 1835; d. Mar. 24, 1893.

Charles S. Russell was offered a commission of major by President Lincoln in 1861, but, not having been long at West Point, he felt he had not sufficient experience to accept this offer. Afterwards, Caleb B. Smith, a cabinet officer, sent a captain's commission, which was accepted, in the Eleventh U. S. Infantry. His first station was at Fort Independence, Boston Harbor; from there he joined the Army of the Potomac, one of the first to enter Richmond, Va., and raised the Colored Twenty-eighth Indiana Regiment. His first fight was in front of Petersburg, Va. He was commissioned colonel by Governor Morton, of Indiana. After the close of the war he was ordered to Corpus Christi, Texas, with General Whitzel, of Ohio, where he remained one year. From here he was ordered to Indiana to muster out his colored regiment. From there he rejoined his old regiment—Eleventh U. S. Infantry—at Richmond, Va. While there the cholera broke out, and he lost a great many men. He was very attentive to the sick, and in recognition of this the new quarters were called "Camp Russell." He died at Cincinnati of cholera.

He was brevetted major, lieutenant-colonel, colonel, and brigadier-general for meritorious services.

Mr. Joseph served in the One Hundred Days' Regiment.

"A YOUTHFUL LIVINGSTONE.

DIED OF JUNGLE FEVER IN THE WILDERNESS OF COLOMBIA.

The readers of this and other newspapers will recall with pleasure a series of travel sketches written from the wilderness of British Guiana and Venezuela and published over the name of G. Frederic Russell. They will recall with a smile his picturesque account of the swizzlers and the swizzers of Georgetown. They will remember the story of his difficult and dangerous voyage up the river Portaro to the gold mines in the rank jungles of Guiana, and the story of his journey along the Schomburgk line into the fever-haunted swamps of the Orinoco.

One of his letters told how deadly the fever had been in the wilderness of Colombia, where he was then staying, and how the only American there beside himself had died on the day of his arrival. It remains for this brief chronicle to tell why his pen has been laid aside forever. He had recovered from one attack of fever and was on his way to new fields of discovery when he was prostrated again with that deadly scourge of the tropics. He died at Turbo, on the river Atrato, on January 11 of the present year. He was on a river steamer in an effort to make the nearest consulate, where he might find purer air. He died in his state-room, attended only by a native, as nearly as can be ascertained by the meagre reports that have come, the second night after going aboard. He knew that death was coming, and gave directions regarding the disposition of his effects and met his fate with the brave spirit of a hero.

He was born at Indianapolis, Indiana, December 10, 1874, and was therefore only twenty-two years old. He was preparing for college, when, at seventeen, he had to abandon his studies to take up the more serious work of life. He began work in Philadelphia as a reporter on the Public Ledger, and afterwards on the Philadelphia Press, and finally became connected with the North American.

He had a decided leaning towards literature, working with astonishing patience and good success at stories and sketches of life. His tales had both style and promise, and considering the fact that all of his work had been done in four years his career was remarkable. He went south as correspondent for the Bachelor Syndicate and met the fate of most Americans who venture into the tropical reaches of Colombia."

The following explains itself:

"TURBO, GULF OF DARIEN,
COLOMBIA,
October 25, 1897.

HON. CLIFFORD SMYTH,
American Consul,
Carthagena.

SIR:

I have the honor to report that, in compliance with your request, I have visited the burial place of the late Mr. Frederic Russell, in the cemetery at Turbo.

Mr. Russell's grave is in the village cemetery, about a quarter of a mile from the main street. It lies in what is, perhaps, the place of honor in the cemetery, and is marked by a plain wooden cross, the cross-piece of which is bound to the shaft by a strong tendril cut from a near-by vine. The cross was apparently cut from a small green tree, and the bark was left on. The wood has now dried, and it will, I think, last for several years.

By some strange coincidence, which one might almost regard as an intelligent sympathy in nature, a slender, clinging vine has sprung from the earth at the foot of the cross, and has twined itself about the shaft in regulated spirals until its top waves a few inches above the top of the cross. A bud is growing on the vine near the arm of the cross, and probably it will blossom in due time. The unconscious sympathy of this little vine, in this quiet, tropical forest, in a far-away land, affected me more than I can put into words, especially as I had known and esteemed Mr. Russell in life. The influence of the little vine was perhaps more marked by reason of the fact that no other grave in the cemetery had this token of remembrance.

There are several other graves in line with Mr. Russell's, and although they are the resting places of persons whose relatives live in the village, yet they are no better marked or cared for than his.

Mr. Russell's grave lies underneath the branches of one of the grandest forest trees that I have ever seen. There are other trees reaching out their branches above the grave, and although they are by no means small, yet they are dwarfed into nothingness by this giant of the forest.

The cemetery is in a forest of great natural beauty. My partner attempted a sketch of the grave, and if anything can be made from it he will be glad to forward it to the family on our return.

In Quibdo I shall doubtless obtain details of Mr. Russell's illness, and on my return in December I shall be pleased to place at your disposal all that I have been able to learn.

Inclosed are three leaves which I picked from the little vine of the cross with the idea that you might wish to forward them to the family.

I am, Sir,

Yours sincerely,

WM. WILLARD HOWARD."

The prominence achieved by Edwin Henry Fitler by reason of his selection as the first mayor under the operations of the Act of Assembly of June 1, 1885, commonly known as the Bullitt Charter, only emphasized his excellent standing as a citizen and the high position which he occupied in the community. Born in this city December 2, 1825, he received an academic education, and, proposing to devote himself to the practice of law, he began the study of the rudiments of that profession in the office of Charles E. Lex, and also studied conveyancing with his brother, Alfred Fitler. His father, William Fitler, was a prominent and successful tanner and leather dealer at Second and Walnut Streets, where the old Fitler mansion still stands, although it is no longer occupied or used by the family.

The bent of Edwin's mind was in the direction of mechanics, and after four years' study of legal lore he decided to abandon the profession and follow his natural inclination. The knowledge of law acquired in his early youth proved, however, of great advantage, and contributed largely to his success. During his nearly fifty years' career as a manufacturer and business man he never was involved in litigation of any kind. After laying aside his text-books he entered the cordage house of George J. Weaver, at Germantown Avenue and Tenth Street, and in two years he had mastered the details of the trade and was admitted to partnership, the firm being thereafter known as George J. Weaver & Co.

Under Mr. Fitler's management labor-saving machinery was introduced, many of the improvements being of his own conception. These inventions he never patented, but gave them freely to the public. In 1859 he purchased the interest of his partner, and the firm-name became Edwin H. Fitler & Co. At the time of his death the firm consisted of himself and his two sons, Edwin H. Fitler, Jr., and W.

W. Fitler, and it is known all over the world as one of the most flourishing and solid concerns in existence. In 1880 the establishment became too cramped for its extensive operations, and it was removed to Bridesburg, where the present works cover fifteen acres of ground, and they are fitted with the highest type of modern machinery. The product is the largest of any cordage factory in the United States. During his entire career Mr. Fitler's relations with his employees were of the most cordial character. Many of the workmen have served the firm for twenty years and upward, and such a thing as a strike has never been known at the Fitler Cordage Works. The esteem in which Mr. Fitler was held by his colleagues in the trade is evidenced by his repeated elections as president of the American Cordage Manufacturers' Association.

At the outbreak of the war of the rebellion Mr. Fitler threw the whole weight of his influence in favor of the Union, and his money, time, and counsel were freely given to the government. Many of his employees enlisted in the Federal army, and no company left the city better equipped for the duties of the field than that which was organized at his works, a matter that he personally attended to. His prominent position in the Union League brought him into the political arena, where he was always foremost in advocating Republican principles and in favoring the selection of competent men for office. He was frequently mentioned in connection with public office, and his friends at one time endeavored to persuade him to become a candidate for United States senator, and again for governor of Pennsylvania. He resisted all such efforts, however, to induce him to seek the suffrages of his fellow-citizens until the time arrived for the selection of the man who, as mayor of the city, was to carry into effect the radical governmental features contained in the new city charter which went into operation on the first Monday in April, 1887.

There were no precedents to be followed. The new mayor was obliged to formulate and lay out a course of action for the guidance of his successors; hence it was that the nominee of the Republican party for the exalted office must be a man of wide experience and business sagacity, who had the confidence of the community. The party leaders in conference with representatives of the business interests, including the leading members of the once powerful and influential Committee of One Hundred, selected Edwin H. Fitler, and his nomination and election followed. His majority was nearly thirty thousand, which was at that time the largest ever received by a candidate for mayor. During his administration many reforms were instituted and many improvements were made in all branches of the city government, as well as in the physical features of the municipality. The mayor rigidly adhered to his own ideas and his own policies, regardless of political or other pressure, and the lines laid down by his administration have been for the most part followed by those who came after him in the office.

After his retirement from the mayoralty, in 1891, Mr. Fitler devoted himself to his business and lived the life of a quiet and unostentatious gentleman. In 1888, while he was mayor, his name was presented by Charles Emory Smith in the Republican National Convention at Chicago for the nomination for the Presidency, and he received twenty-two votes for that honor, including those of the solid delegation from this city.

Mr. Fitler was a director of the National Bank of the Northern Liberties, and has been vice-president and president of the Union League. In 1875-76 he was a member of the Centennial Board of Finance, and did his full share of the work which made the great exposition a success and a credit to the city of Philadelphia. He was noted for his hospitality and his many engaging social and congenial qualities.

“Poulson's American Daily Advertiser, Aug. 12, 1804.”

“ ‘ In the midst of life we are in death.’ ”

Died,

On the 6th. inst. aged 35 years, of the Dysentery, at his dwelling in the Northern Liberties, Doctor George Pfeiffer, a young man of the most eminent talents in his profession, and an ornament to society—he was a kind and affectionate husband, a tender and indulgent father, a man of strict integrity and humanity, and amply blessed with all the social virtues. He has left a disconsolate widow and five children to lament their irreparable loss, and mourn the severe tho' just dispensation of Divine Providence, in taking away their protector, in the bloom of health, and in the prime of life. He was universally respected by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, and will long, very long be kindly remembered by them.”

The above also appeared in “Relf's Philadelphia Gazette and Daily Advertiser, Aug. 10, 1804.” Rush Library, Phila.
